

Urban Fact Files

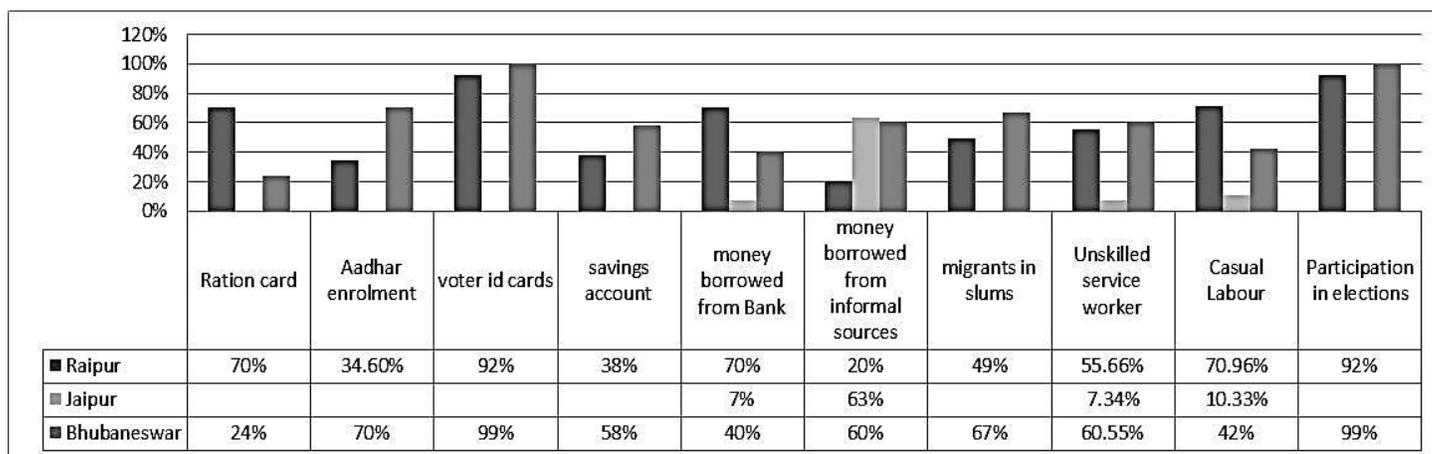

PRIA and its partners are running a 'National Campaign' for 'putting governance of urban poverty issues' on the 'political agenda' in the four direction of India: Rajasthan, West Bengal, Odisha, Madhya Pradesh, Chhattisgarh, Bihar, Kerala, Karnataka and Tamil Nadu. Studies and public level consultations are being taken up in these states to understand the issues of urban poor and to have a dialogue with the political actors, media and civil society. Terraurban has uploaded the study undertaken by PRIA: 'Government Led exclusion of urban poor- the greater contributor and lesser recipient' for the States of Chhattisgarh, Rajasthan and Odisha which can be accessed at: <http://terraurban.wordpress.com/resources/>. This database is regularly being updated with fact files from other states as well.

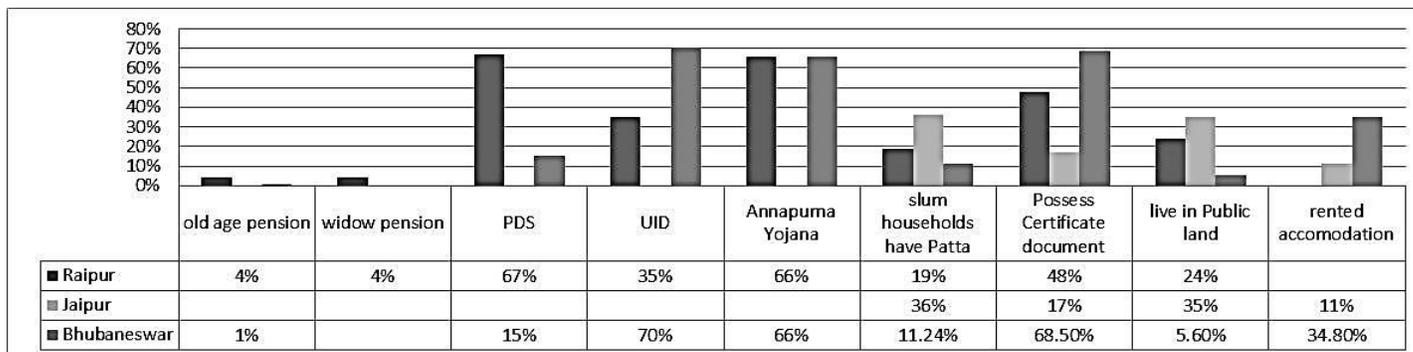

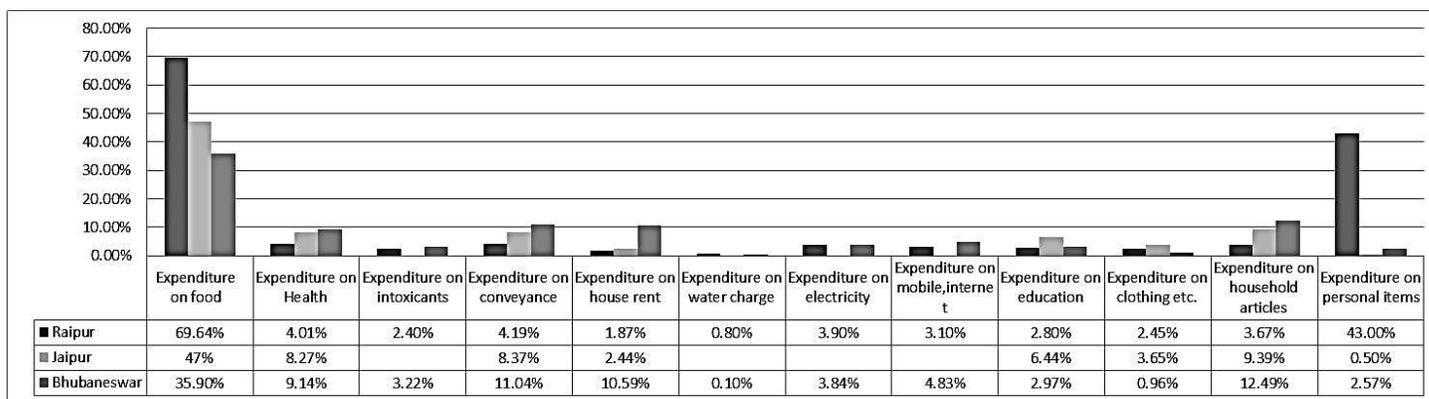

A quick comparison of the 'urban situation' of the three states of Chhattisgarh, Rajasthan and Odisha is given below:

	Chhattisgarh	Rajasthan	Odisha
area	1,35,191 sq.km	342,239 sq.km	155,820 sq.km
overall population	2,55,40,196	6,86,21,012	4,19,47,358
slum households	3,95,297	3, 83,134	3,50,306

PRIA also conducted a primary study in the 50 slums each of Raipur, Jaipur and Bhubaneswar. Here are some quick findings:

Such studies have been supported with an on ground critique of various schemes such IHSDP and housing under JNNURM wherein in various cities the urban poor had to face the politics of improper allocation of houses, unhygienic transit camps and inadequate provision of services in the new housing, forcing them in even more grave conditions than before.

Public Consultations – Urban issues ‘too’ are important for the ‘political manifesto’

In the fever of Lok Sabha 2014 elections, every political party has come out with its manifesto and is making ‘promises’ to people as a bait to be voted into the power. However most of these parties are oblivious to the present urban conditions and need for an immediate action towards an inclusive urban society. PRIA with its partners is organizing State and City level consultations with various stakeholders and representatives of these political parties. Forum of Informal Urban Poor Workers (FIUPW) and PRIA have articulated an ‘URBAN MANIFESTO’ based on these consultations. There are four main ‘demands’ that have been put forth in this manifesto:

PROVISION OF IDENTITY CARDS

Dignity and identity to poor
Government identity proofs to all informal settlers
Birth registration certificates to the children of informal settlers

LIVELIHOOD AND SOCIAL SECURITY

Employment guarantee
Non employment allowance
Pension
Monsoon/draught allowance
Employment opportunities
Safety and security at work place
Wage board for retail workers
Central monitoring taskforce to implement Hawkers Act

HOUSING FACILITIES

Systematic and accountable efforts by central govt. To improve the functioning of temporary shelters
Housing to all hawkers under ray and JNNURM
Central board to monitor the function of all homeless shelters
Policy intervention to address the challenges faced by homeless people

EDUCATION

Free and compulsory education for children in the 6-14 age group
Privatization of govt. School need to be checked

The manifesto propagates proactive legislative actions and institutional reforms. Read the manifesto in detail at :

Various public consultations and interactions with the service providers also gave an opportunity to understand the perspective of those hungry for 'seat'. For instance, in the Raipur consultation honorable Mayor, Ms. Jyoti Khandelwal, accepted that sometimes political issues dominate the issues of common people and that the responsibility of urban poor rests with the government and also pointed out the reasons for migration of people. She also admitted that the problems at community level could be solved best by involving them and giving them the responsibility. Mr. Lalit Kishore representing the BJP, accepted that a large percentage of urban population lives in slum. He put forward some of the points in their election manifesto like reducing the rate of electricity, supply of potable water to every household, survey of BPL families and providing of ration card, reducing the rate of gas cylinders, construction of toilets, providing pension and the minimum amount would be Rs. 1500, provision of water tank, starting a single window system for providing ration card, BPL card, birth certificate, and rights, water supply and electricity connection etc. One of the participants suggested incorporating the issues of women particularly focusing on their social security, education and toilet facilities. The communities from slum also presented their problems. However, not all parties were as positive – BSP and AAP had a half-hearted reaction to the 'urban manifesto'.

Consultation at Raipur

Some tags and phrases that got attached to these political representatives were 'Selective Amnesia vs. Preparedness', 'Harassment' and 'Fake promises'.

In India, urban development is under the whims and fancies of a 'five year term' of the elected representatives. Governments come and go, schemes begin and get scrapped, planning commission changes the allocated funds, master plan changes before it is even approved, Commissioner(s) and Mayor(s) are on different tangents and the 'needs' of the people take a back seat

However, it is not only the 'service providers' that have a role to play in building an inclusive urban society. The 'citizens' of democracy have an equal responsibility. From various consultation it is evident that most communities are either 'afraid' to raise their voice and have not 'collectivized'. It is important and utmost necessary at this moment for all the urban poor communities to 'speak' in unison. Electoral democracy only then can have a significant impact.

In Raipur consultation the voices of Political parties were counter parted by the urban poor who declared that in this election they want their rights in written and announced that in this election they want written assurance from the electing representative in the demand letter drafted by them including all the major issues and said that no matter who will be the winner of this election they just want to win in raising & claiming their voices. The oath letter drafted by the slum dwellers is attached here:

Let's take a pledge and do 'our-bit' to ensure that in such complexity of urban governance the real issues are put forth!

Thought of the month

The process of reducing the gap between the urban representative and urban poor has started. The state level consultations are a tool to achieve this goal. There is need for collectivization and convergence of voices of both urban poor and urban people's representatives who at this hour are scattered and acting as individual entities propagating individualistic approach to deal with the problems of urbanization, urban poor and urban governance as a whole! – Shivani Singh, PRIA
